Beauty in Authenticity

Written by Karen Cummings-Palmer

Wellness is our most valuable commodity - it has the power to render almost worthless the value of all others with a single dose of dis-ease. But when we are well, really well - when we feel so strong and sure that our stomachs are as calm as our minds, when our choice of comfort food is nourishment that supports rather than depletes us and our skin glows in glorious celebration then everything feels better. And it is not all or nothing; we should not sacrifice good in pursuit of perfection. Fancy equipment restrictive diets and strict exercise regimes are not the prerequisites of a healthy lifestyle and indeed the preoccupation with unattainable ideals can be a major cause of stress, which like the excess consumption of refined sugar, lack of sleep or simply sitting too much is one of modernity's greatest threats.

It is those things that are within our reach and within our control that count the most; learning to chew each mouthful twenty-five times must surely be one of the most efficient ways of supporting the gut and therefore the entire body because we are what we eat but only if we can digest it effectively first. With each day comes another opportunity to become a more powerful advocate for our own health. I was inspired to do this work because of my own struggles with eczema that left me with scars - now faded with age into marks of humility. Whilst I could not banish it completely I was able to control its intensity by adding in the right food, supplementation and skincare, and by removing (mostly) the food that inflamed it.

True wellness is fermented in the ordinary pursuits of everyday life. It is in the choices we make at every meal, with every movement and every breath. It is harnessed in our minds and cemented in our thoughts, yes Vitamin D is really important but a positive thought, a joyful moment, inner peace - all essential nourishment and must be part of our daily diet. It is the celebration of African Heritage in all of its glorious hues, the re-discovery of its super foods, precious oils and powerful herbs and the inclusion of Ageless Beauties that excites me most about these pages.

There is an abundance of both the means and the methods for better health on the continent and in the culture from potent adaptogens that help us deal with demands of modern life to ancient beauty rituals that complement or replace invasive solutions to skin care.

Let's embrace the natural resources that can heal and enhance us - from the seed that can help us manage weight to the fruit that can help support the liver. And it is not just about what there is for the taking, for the creating and for the nurturing, it is about how we show and see the health and beauty of Africa with all of its restorative life enhancing possibilities.

I began this work in Los Angeles when I had the pleasure of interviewing some of the most influential people in the health and beauty industry in Los Angeles.

As passion turned to business I studied integrative nutrition and began working with private clients from Hollywood royalty to new mothers - going into corporations and restaurants - putting health quite literally on the menu because I think food should nourish, nurture and get us glowing and it should always be delicious.

I now divide my time between working with health and beauty brands in both development and brand ambassador roles and my health and nutrition consultancy. When it comes to wellness will power is unreliable, it will falter when we need it most but get the right knowledge, identify your personal leverage; children, businesses, life's work, or good old fashioned vanity - we all have something to look and feel better for - then adopt rituals to live, that is the way to create sustainable wellness.

It is wonderful to see a client fit into forgotten clothes, rid themselves of a chronic skin condition or wipe away years that were prematurely etched onto faces but the real magic happens when they begin to make choices that will support them - all on their own in the privacy of their kitchen. It is when I have helped clients re-frame and re-name comfort food that the magic comes, when my voice is replaced by their own and it is neither devil nor angel but compassionately authentically theirs.

There is such beauty in authenticity and it is my pleasure to write a few lines of this story and it is my hope that as it develops so does your best health because it's the only vehicle we will ever truly need and if fueled and fired will carry us through the magical, mystical, journey of our lives.

Take great care,

Karen Cummings-Palmer

ROCK ON IN STYLE

STEVENSON Brothers have been making stunningly designed rocking horses from their workshops in Bethersden since 1982. Being twin brothers they knew they wanted to work together and it was after Art School in Bristol that they decided to talk to their uncle James Bosworthick who had been making rocking horses for many years. A shed was borrowed on the family farm in Kingsnorth, (once owned by Sir Freddie Laker), and the pair launched their business in October that same year.

With a clear vision to re-establish the desire for the nostalgic classic rocking horse which at that time was mostly only available in fibre glass, plywood and fur, they started making Dapple Grey horses on the traditional Georgian bow rockers and Victorian safety stands. With the encouragement of the British Overseas Trade Board they began travelling to Fairs in London, Nuremberg, New York, Sydney & Dubai, and global interest increased for their beautiful designs now created in a variety of hardwoods including English Oak and Black American Walnut and Tulip wood.

An increasing trend has clients commissioning rocking horses in the likeness of their own favourite real horse. Numerous famous horses have been copied including race horses, Frankel, Long Run, Synchronised and Best Mate, Eventers including Toytown, Headley Britannia and recently Bluestone Luke and even favourite family horses. It's not just children that appreciate these collectable pieces of Equine sculpture, says Marc Stevenson "often its adults that didn't get a rocking horse as a child that finally get that longed for rocking horse for themselves. Parents and grandparents alike see the benefits of children playing on the horses learning balance and practicing their early riding skills. After all that's what rocking horses were invented for, to teach children to ride".

In association with Dorset based, Fernandes Exquisite Creations who specialise in one off Swarovski Crystal covered artefacts, three unique crystal rocking horses have been created after many months of skill and dedication. The first crystal horse was featured in the Christmas television programme by Channel Four, and subsequently purchased as a wedding present for a new bride in the midlands. The Zebra Swarovski rocking horse shown here is available through Stevenson Brothers and Fernandes Exquisite Creations and can be delivered in time for Christmas. It has 82,000 crystals all glued in place by hand, it is fitted with a secret locking compartment under the tummy for those treasured keepsakes and a hallmarked silver plaque with the makers logos and unique number. Tack has not been included but is available if desired, the crystals are not sharp and the piece can be ridden bare back by children and adults alike. The third piece is a miniature white Crystal unicorn on a bow rocker which would be a delight on a mantel piece sparkling away as it rocks.

REPRESENTING

By Enekpen Eke | Wardrobe stylist, Frank Beauty Group

A positive body image must start with a healthy and realistic attitude to the perception of a beautiful body and whilst a vast majority of us are already well equipped with feeling empowered about who we are and how we look, many are often influenced by the media and their narrow view on beauty standards.

This begs the question: When it comes to an ever growing Body Positive Movement, why are the majority of brands still failing to cater to all markets in not showcasing a diverse range of models in their fashion campaigns?

We must accept more body positivity and diversity in a modern fashion world, because the conventional beauty standards desirable today, are just too narrow.

In my line of work I have learned that each of us at some point in time will have, or are currently going through a self-love journey and reviewing our own thoughts on our body image.

With the re-emergence of body positivity and the celebration of all body types particularly on social media, why in the media is it that the body image is lacking of ethnic thoughts and opinions. Campaigns surrounding the subject appear to consistently side line our unique beauties in favour of what is seen to be mainstream beauty standards.

Coming from a desire to open up conversations in campaigns communicating body positivity and beauty in every body, I call upon the global power brands of the fashion world, Mainstream and Independents, to rise as key influencers because there is a need for game-changing campaigns featuring collections from brands. One that is flamboyant, vibrant and fitting, with clothing that will speak in volumes. After all, it is our clothing that impacts a strong personal presence in a world where we have just seconds to make a first impression be it face to face or digitally. There is an untapped world here waiting to be dressed. A world wanting a wardrobe that works as hard as they do, calling for better representation of every body, in the media.

People believe what they see and making your beauty and what makes you different visible, allows people to see that same beauty in themselves, which is why self-love is so important for everyone.

Visibility even when it is the opposite of what people want to see, is important and whilst the majority of ethnicities are capable of showering themselves with this, consistently featuring their beauty in media and fashion campaigns is the shuffle forward many would love to see. I know first-hand that the most powerful changes can be made to a person's self-image and how they will perceive themselves after a personal styling session.

It can alter the way they view and treat themselves and can better stimulate a response desired in others. A positive body image is the key to confidence and self-esteem, it includes a healthy attitude, a strong mind and body and better quality relationships, which will benefit every area of your life.

A positive body image builds personality in the form of layers and aids how we wish to be perceived by other people. It's like choosing an outfit from our wardrobe, the layers can be used to tell the world who we are, what we value, or even to hide our inner selves behind the layers of our personality, like a protective suit of armour.

But if we nurture our sense of inner beauty, we make our self-esteem and self - image resilient, steady and strong, ready for those times in life when we need it the most.

Enekpen Eke is a Body Positivity Coach, Style Consultant and creator of The Inizio Experience. Passionate about people and style, she represents diversity and the inclusion of body positivity for global superpowers wanting to do good in the world.

YOUR WORK OUT YOUR WAY

By CJ Swaby

THE problem with keeping fit is that not everyone wants to spend their life in the gym. You're a busy person who has got moves to make and your demanding work and social life reflect this. Who wants to spend endless hours working out when it stops you enjoying the very life that you are trying to enhance by working out in the first place? It makes no sense right? But what can you do?

This is the same story that I hear from many of my clients that work with me in person or on my Project 12 online Body Transformation Program. The answer is a lot simpler than you think.

There are distinct guidelines for exercise established by the scientific literature, but your goals will determine which set of guidelines you should follow, but the American College of Sports Medicine (ACSM) is the gold standard. Here are the guidelines

Cardiovascular Fitness

- Adults should get at least 150 minutes of moderate-intensity exercise per week.

Resistance Exercises

- Adults should train each major muscle group two or three days each week using a variety of exercises and equipment.
- Very light or light intensity is best for older persons or previously sedentary adults starting exercise.

Flexibility Exercises

- Adults should do flexibility exercises at least two or three days each week to improve range of motion.
- Each stretch should be held for 10-30 seconds to the point of tightness or slight discomfort.
- Repeat each stretch two to four times, accumulating 60 seconds per stretch.

Now that you have an overview of the guidelines, let's look at how you can make this fit into your lifestyle for optimum benefit.

Let's say for example that you want to incorporate some cardiovascular training into your workout, here's an example of how you can break down that weekly 150 minute recommendation:

- 30-60 minutes of moderate-intensity exercise (five days per week) or 20-60 minutes of vigorous-intensity exercise (three days per week).
- One continuous session and multiple shorter sessions (of at least 10 minutes) are both acceptable to accumulate desired amount of daily exercise

With my clients that are short on time I often recommend shortened workouts, so rather than spending an hour or more working out, aim for 20 - 30 minute workouts at a higher intensity. Now by high intensity I mean that you must be working up a sweat and breathing heavily, if you can have a full on conversation with your gym buddy or taking that all important business call at the same time, chances are that you are not working out hard enough.

Ok, but what about when life throws you a curve ball, and you don't even have time to do that 30 minute workout? Here's the truth, you can still get a physical benefit from doing a 10 minute workout which still adds up towards your 150 minute target.

Here is a simple example:

- 10 minutes on the punch bag
- 10 minutes of sprint intervals
- 10 minutes of sprints on the bike

You get the idea right? The key thing here is to ask yourself what is your Minimum Effective Dose? (MED). Keep your eye on the bigger picture. Every session doesn't have to be perfect.

So now let's take a look at resistance training.

Regardless of your age and gender, everyone should be doing some form of resistance training. Not everyone wants to be a bodybuilder, power lifter or the Incredible Hulk (and you don't have to be). However, resistance training can help you look good naked, it can help you perform better in any sport you do (whether for recreation or competing), it can reduce the risk of osteoporosis, and can help to improve your mood and mental clarity and who wouldn't want that!

How you use resistance training in your workouts, depends really on your goal. The beauty of resistance training is that there are so many different possibilities available to you. First look at the modality you want to use. Let me give you an example

- Bodyweight exercises & Suspension trainers
- Barbells and Dumbbells
- Kettlebells
- Resistance machines

If you can't make it to the gym that often or just don't enjoy it, then often a home gym set up can often save you both time and money. Not only that, depending on how you design your home gym, you can invite friends or family to come and train with you. I advise my clients who work with me online that a great option for this is Kettlebells, or a simple set up of a barbell, a bench, a rack with some weights.

But what if you want to get simultaneously lean, strong and fit? If this is the case then you don't need to stick with the outdated idea that you need to do weights and "cardio" separately. Do this instead

In the next edition, I will be showing you how to incorporate exercise modalities such as Circuit Training and Density Training into your lifestyle. Until then, keep calm and work out!

RARE EXPERIENCES, SEASONED TRAVELERS

THE ESTATE TALKS EXCLUSIVELY TO MARIA PAJARES

What has been the professional highlight for you this year?

No one specific event. Overall our reputation which is very strong right now and reflected in the very positive feedback we are receiving from clients as well as a significant and exciting increase in new business enquiries. But we'll never rest on our laurels – there is always room for improvement. Ultimately we simply want to provide a great service to our clients and help them grow their UK business – that gives us great satisfaction.

Where did you last vacate?

Barcelona (for a short city break) during the declaration of independence a few weekends ago – fascinating time to be there and peaceful – nothing like how it was portrayed by the media.

What are a few top tips on choosing a new destination to visit?

Don't just choose somewhere because it's fashionable – choose somewhere that fits your own personal criteria for that particular trip – it might depend on how you are feeling, what kind of holiday you need (adventure, relaxation, culture etc), who you are travelling with, time of year and budget of course.

Research online and if trying something a little out of the ordinary, turn to an expert for advice – travel advisors definitely still have their place and can save you a lot of research time as well as providing security and offering a wealth of knowledge.

What are seasoned travellers now looking for in terms of rare experiences from luxury destinations?

Access to new experiences – something they wouldn't normally have a chance to experience – e.g. Peninsula Academies which offer you exceptional authentic local experiences when staying at one of their properties.

At the other end of the spectrum, it can be as simple as being cut off from reality – peace, no wi-fi, somewhere relaxed with no rules, no dressing up, a totally natural and calm environment, basically time with family and friends. Wellness, incorporating wellbeing into their trip – not necessarily a work out or a massage, but a more overall health assessment or a new wellbeing experience – e.g. access to a practitioner that might not be so easily accessible back home.

LUXURY IN BRAZIL

Brazil is a luxury destination offering authentic experiences with an excellent choice of hotels throughout its territory: from north to south, from the Amazon to the coast, there are unique experiences that meet the growing demand for quality services.

Current market data shows that Generation Z, composed of those born between the mid-1990s and 2010, determines where families will travel. By 2020, these groups will account for 40 percent of tourists who use their savings to hit the road. Travelers are tired of traditional narratives and are looking for simpler, focused, and transformative experiences. This is a great scenario for Brazil as a luxury travel destination because it has paradisiacal beaches throughout its coastline, for surfing like Camburi, 2 hours from the city of São Paulo; for kitesurfing like the idyllic Preá Beach, 3 hours from Fortaleza; and picturesque places where you can interact with the locals, like the famous 'Quadrado' in Trancoso, Bahia. The experience map is diverse; you just have to understand visitors' expectations!

in Burle Marx Park, by Oetker Collection, and next year at least two more luxury hotels will be launched: Four Seasons and Torre Rosewood by Rosewood Hotels & Resorts.

Brazil, with its geographic and cultural vastness and diversity, is poised to welcome the world's most demanding travelers. To learn more about the variety of hotels and experiences, please contact BLTA and browse great options at www.blta.com.br.

ABOUT EMBRATUR

Embratur (The Brazilian Tourist Board) is the specialist agency of the Brazilian Ministry of Tourism responsible for implementing National Tourism Policy in the areas of promotion and marketing support for Brazilian tourist destinations, services and products in the international market. Embratur helps to generate social and economic development for the country by increasing the flow of international tourists to national destinations.

Key features make Brazil an attractive destination for foreign luxury visitors, including the fact that most rooms are in small hotels in the countryside or beaches; there is no standard itinerary as in other countries; the cultural scene is very authentic, and ordinary Brazilians really interact with foreign tourists.

With 30 member luxury properties and three inbound operators, BLTA (Brazilian Luxury Travel Association) accounts for 70-80 percent of stays booked by leisure travelers in this segment coming to Brazil. Our portfolio includes from exclusive resorts and beachside boutique hotels, to lodges in areas like the Pantanal and the Amazon rainforest.
